Here's the Wiki excerpt intended for Stirling's series, let me know you may notice the similarities:
"Emberverse, or Change World,] is a group of postapocalyptic alternate history novels written by S. M. Stirling. The novels depict that events following "The Change", which caused electricity, guns, explosives, internal combustion engines, and steam power to halt working. ".

Sigh. I like Abrams work typically and if I seen TV (I will not, but if its a fantastic series I'll rent it/stream it later) and I understand that there are only a great number of threads of original ideas that can be mined. I'm fine with that as well. I enjoy when a fresh take is done on a vintage idea. BUT, I must draw the line if the derivative does not give proper credit to the original idea.

With the exception of the characters on NBC fresh series Revolution, because they will have zero electricity to watch TV FOR PC after an apocalyptic catastrophe leaves America unplugged via all devices and devices. That right, there no cars, no cell phones, no Internet, no that sounds like it could be pretty relaxing. But we sure appearing stripped of technology may have some serious consequences to the show characters, who will be gamed by costars like Billy Burke (Twilight), Giancarlo Esposito (Busting Bad) and Andrea Roth (Ringer). Abrams (Lost) and also Eric Kripke (Great) will produce this project.
